

Casey on the Case

It was a foggy night, and everyone was quiet and asleep. But at the Queen's Museum, there was a break-in. Someone had stolen the Queen's crown! The next day, some of the queen's subjects asked Detective Cat Casey to figure out who stole it. Casey was a small black and white cat who always wore a tan trench coat and a brown hat just like Sherlock Holmes. First, she went to the scene of the crime. There were no fingerprints or triggered laser alarms. Next, she checked the cameras. She saw a white blur go across the screen. She already had some suspects in mind so she started interviewing them one by one. First up was a large orange cat named Carol, but she was busy eating ice cream when the crime occurred. Next was Knox the tabby cat. He said was reading a book during the break-in. Last was Ginger the black cat, but she was on a trip. Casey was out of suspects so she went back to the footage. This time, she took her time reviewing it. She noticed a flash of purple with the white blur, so she slowed down the footage even more. The purple was the signature scarf of the famous cat burglar named Beatrice! Casey was able to retrieve the crown for the queen. Case closed!
